One important aspect of Parkinson’s Disease (PD) that sets it apart from other conditions is its complexity. Twenty years ago, PD was purely considered a “movement disorder,” resulting in symptoms affecting mobility, such as stiffness, slowness, and difficulty walking. Now, we know that only scratches the surface! In addition to motor symptoms, PD involves an array of non-motor symptoms like constipation, sleep disturbance, depression, anxiety, cognitive impairment, and trouble with speech and swallowing to name a few. Therefore, it really makes sense to approach this from a multidisciplinary care perspective.

What does multidisciplinary care entail? It is a model of healthcare that harnesses the expertise of a variety of specialists to provide truly comprehensive care for the whole person. Fifty years ago, a patient would have all their medical issues managed by their primary care physician. As the medical field has evolved, we have subspecialists trained in a variety of diseases to provide expert care in a certain area. Within the realm of Parkinson’s, we should capitalize on the talents and skills of others in the healthcare field by employing a “team” approach.

If I were to recruit an all-star team for PD, it would include:

1. Parkinson’s Neurologist (may include a Movement Disorders Fellow and a Nurse Practitioner)
2. Neuro Physical Therapist (unlike most PTs who are orthopedics-focused, Neuro PT’s have special training in neurologic conditions, like PD. They may even have certification in LSVT BIG or PWR-Parkinson’s Wellness Recovery)
3. Speech / Swallow Therapist (some specialize in PD, with certification in LSVT LOUD to help with both voice and swallowing)
4. Psychiatrist or Geri-psychiatrist (doctors who are experts in depression, anxiety, and psychosis)
5. Psychologist or counselor (both for the person with PD and the spouse)
6. Social Worker (An MSW provides valuable information about community resources, caregiver assistance, medication financial assistance programs, etc)
7. Occupational therapist (OT’s help with hand and finger dexterity, specialized utensils, and assistive devices for getting around)

What If?
by Dorothy Ross, Davis Support Group

What if I had been diagnosed with Parkinson’s disease when I was 60 years old instead of hearing the bad news after I turned 70? How might my life have been different? I certainly wouldn’t have done so much adventurous traveling.

During the decade prior to my diagnosis, I visited three different continents. First my husband and I joined my brother and his wife for the Demi Tour du Mont Blanc, a 50-mile trek at high elevation on Europe’s highest peak. Our hike averaged fifteen miles a day—through France, Italy, and Switzerland. Would a Parkie do that?

Then, in the autumn of 2001, I was granted my lifelong wish to see the Dark Continent. The trip began with two weeks at a South Africa safari lodge, followed by a week on the watery edge of Botswana’s Okavanga Delta. Jouncing across the bush in an open Land Rover without seat belts in pursuit of a herd of elephants was very exciting and very dangerous.

Bill and I toured Ecuador’s Galapagos Islands just a year before I received my diagnosis. Tracking the fearless fauna of Darwin’s islands meant slip sliding on wet rocks and slick red mud. Getting close enough to get a picture of a blue-footed booby was fun, but it wasn’t easy. We needed our doctor’s permission to make the trip because we were over 65. Would she have signed my form if she’d known I had Parkinson’s?

We now know, from looking at old home videos, that I had PD for at least ten years before my diagnosis. Stiff arms and pill-rolling fingers made my motion sickness obvious, once we knew what to look for. I’m glad I wasn’t aware of my insidious invader. The Africa trip wouldn’t have happened if we’d known about my condition. Hiking in the Alps? Not likely. The Galapagos? No way.

Movement Disorders Specialists tout the benefits of early detection. They say the sooner someone with Parkinson’s begins an exercise regimen and starts taking anti-PD medications the longer that person can live well with the disease. I suppose that’s true for many people. Personally, I’m grateful for my decade of undetected Parkinson’s. They were ten of the best years of my life.

Notes from the Association

Welcome to the Board

Carolyn Loveridge has joined the Board of Directors of the Parkinson Association of Northern California. Carolyn’s career centered on Early Childhood Education where she worked in the nonprofit arena and for the State of California. Carolyn retired from the California Department of Education, Early Education, and Support Division. Many of you may recognize Carolyn, as a carepartner for her husband Arnold, she has been an active participant in the Parkinson’s Community for several years.

In addition to joining the board of directors, Carolyn will be serving as the incoming Editor of the Parkinson Path!

Dates to Note

• The Parkinson Foundation will hold its Moving Day! Walk in Sacramento on May 5, 2019. Funds raised support the Parkinson’s Foundation national mission.

• The 2019 Parkinson Association’s Educational Conference will be held on October 26, 2019, at the McClellan Conference Center, Sacramento. More information to follow.
SUPPORT GROUP SHARING

DMV Ombudsman at Roseville Support Group

Jerrold Sieberg, the Northern California Senior Ombudsman from the DMV, was invited to speak at the Roseville Parkinson’s Support Group after many of the members expressed concerns about the process for renewing their driver’s licenses. Jerrold confirmed that it is your mental and physical condition, and your ability to follow traffic laws, that most impact your ability to maintain your license. He also shared that drivers age 70 or older are required to renew their licenses in person and will have to take a written exam and a vision test to verify they can see and think clearly enough to drive safely.

Jerrold discussed the idea that as we age our reaction time slows, and we may be less reliable drivers. Statistically, he shared, when seniors and teenagers drive a similar number of miles, they are involved in a similar number of accidents. However, seniors, who tend to limit their driving to familiar places and daylight hours appear to be safer drivers. A person’s age alone is not a sufficient reason for a reexamination. However, the DMV has the authority to investigate and reexamine every driver’s ability to operate a motor vehicle safely if there is a change in their physical or mental condition or a poor driving record.

Jerrold confirmed that doctors are required to report and explain medical findings to DMV. These include symptoms such as the lapse of consciousness, stroke, Parkinson’s disease, cognitive impairments such as dementia, sleep disorders, or diabetes.

FyI, to improve your driving skills and perhaps reduce your insurance rate, check out the Mature Driver Improvement Course which provides instruction, specifically tailored to older drivers, regarding defensive driving and California motor vehicle laws. A list of approved programs is available on the DMV website.

To view the DMV Senior Guide for Safe Driving go to https://www.dmv.ca.gov and put “senior” in the search box. You can also arrange to have a guest speaker by contacting the Ombudsman for Sacramento and Northern California Counties at 916-657-6464.

8. Personal Trainer
9. Gastroenterologist and/or urologist (constipation and bladder dysfunction can become challenging and require a specialized approach)
10. Dietician or Nutritionist (Maintaining proper nutrition while optimizing the effect of one’s medications can be a tough balancing act, and nutritionists can be quite helpful in this regard)
11. Palliative care specialist
12. Financial planner

This may look like a Fantasy sports team line-up, but this is the future of Parkinson’s care. The days when you saw a neurologist alone will be gone, and the “clinic of the future” will have all these specialists in one place to help you from all different angles. For the time being, getting all these specialists in the same place, at the same time, is a challenge (but we’re working on it!). So for now, each person should assume the role of Team Manager and look to recruit these specialists to work in their corner. With a condition as complex as Parkinson’s, enlisting the help of professionals across this spectrum ensures a holistic and comprehensive approach that, in all likelihood, might slow the complications of PD or even slow progression of the disease. This, in turn, will help you stay proactive and live your best life with Parkinson’s.
